--- WiseGuide analysis:

Looks like things are in place again for stocks to resume their strong uptrend. Now that Greenspan has spoken (a non-event), bonds are higher, economic data is right in line, and Intel's numbers were better than expected, the scared money that was waiting on the sidelines should pour into the marketplace. This latest shakeout has actually helped the market internals and with everything in place, we should see a very nice rally materialize. This continues to be a momentum market on both the upside and the downside, and when the market gets a head of steam it continues in that direction. Look for higher prices all day, with shallow pullbacks making it difficult for buyers to get in.

FOUR TIMES A DAY

--- S&P futures snapshot

(click on chart to view, close window to return)

--- WiseGuide analysis:

The uptrend is again solidly in place, and the buying continues. On days like today the selloffs are usually very shallow, making it difficult for new buyers to get in and very difficult for the shorts that are getting squeezed. With a 3 day weekend coming up, and the news for the week out, we will probably settle into a range up at these levels for a while. In this volatile market, anything can happen, but the momentum is back and the buyers are in control.

THE STRETCH RUN

Bond Futures Close:	89*24
Bond Futures Change:	-*17
Long Bond Yield:	6.68%

--- WiseGuide analysis:

Stocks are having a nice solid day today with the chip stocks leading the way after Intel's earnings yesterday. The Sox or Semiconductor Index is up 8% led by INTC which is up an astounding 14%. The bond market is still soft and after a one day rally yesterday reverted back to their old ways and in a shortened session closed down 17/32. The market is running into some profit taking in late trading ahead of a 3 day weekend, but after a wild week spent most of the day consolidating its recent gains. Should be more of the same in the last hour, with most traders taking to the sidelines and trying it again next week.

--- WiseGuide analysis:

The market started the week on a positive note, spent the next couple of days under pressure, worried about all kinds of things that turned out to be favorable and ended with a strong two day rally. Chairman Greenspan spoke and the market liked what he had to say-no problem. Inflation numbers were a worry to the market but came in right in line or a little better-no problem. The earnings period began and traders wondered if stocks could still meet their lofty expectations-no problem. And after last weeks heavy selling pressure, the question again was whether the end had finally come- again no problem. When all the news came out and traders again felt confident that the market was still on track, the buying started and the strong momentum kept it going. The earnings have just begun, and there will be a surprise or two along the way, but for now it looks like everything is in place for the rally to continue. It would help if the bonds would show some kind of strength, or at least stop going down, but equities are in a world of their own. With the broader market participating and leadership from groups other than the internet, buyers are again in charge and it looks like we can look for higher prices to come.
